"With the formal surrender of the Japanese Empire today, September 2, 1945, the long and terrible war is at an end. President Truman, speaking on behalf of all the United Nations, has proclaimed this day as V-J Day. The surrender of Japan marks the turning point for us and for the peoples of all the United Nations."

— Message of President Sergio Osmeña to the Filipino people on V-J Day, September 2, 1945

Today, September 2, marks the 70th Anniversary of the end of World War II. In commemoration of this historical turning point, we have designed a special page containing links to a timeline, archival photos and videos, and a number of articles highlighting the extent of WW2 within our shores: from the Fall of Bataan to the Battle of Manila, among others.

You can visit the page via the following url: <http://www.gov.ph/featured/ww2/>

Anyway, what's so interesting about the video clip of the show is that it also contains some TV commercials of the period, including the original TV commercial jingle of Birch Tree Milk (including the one with Helen Vela).

I encouraged everybody to post anything which are 'something nostalgic'. We're not limited to any nostalgic media stuffs like radio and TV shows, advertisements, print, anything. You should also post some articles and photos other than what I have mentioned (it should be a classic), but still, you must follow the rules. Okay?!

Anu-ano 'yung iba't-ibang mga patalastas o sponsors ng "Eat Bulaga" na napapansin noon? (The segment wherein the product was sponsored should also be included.)

Note: This post has been reposted for the 36th anniversary of the country's longest-running noontime variety show. Members who are planning to post about this topic should not make another post about this, but rather search this post in this group under the keywords "Eat Bulaga" or "sponsors." (The search box for this group (only) is found in this group page, under the group's cover photo. The search box has a text called "Search This Group...") I'll show you a picture about that feature sooner or later.

When I was a kid, I was scared of billboard. Here are two (2) reasons why I was scared on that billboard:

1. They were ENORMOUS.

2. Rare faces

But now, no fear at all.

Ask ko lang kayo, anong billboard ang kinatatakutan ninyo dati?

NOTE: The date is ranging from when the first billboard was posted until 2007?

Please answer wisely.

I encouraged everybody to post anything which are 'something nostalgic'. We're not limited to any nostalgic media stuffs like radio and TV shows, advertisements, print, anything. You should also post some articles and photos other than what I have mentioned (it should be a classic), but still, you must follow the rules. Okay?!

Ang nangyayari ngayon sa #AIDub ang nagpapaalala sa akin ng mga nangyayari noon sa pagsikat ng Asianovela na Meteor Garden..

Una itong umere sa ABS-CBN noong 2003 bilang parte ng kanilang ika-50 taon sa telebisyon.. Tulad ng #AIDub, grabe din ang kasikatan ng Asian Drama na ito noon.. Kahit saang FM Station ay mapakikilingan mo ang karamihan sa mga OST ng nasabing Asian Drama.. Usong uso din noon ang mga malalaking Cards na may Picture ng mga Character ng Meteor Garden at may bonus pang Lyrics ng isa sa mga kanta nila.. Dinumog din sila noong nag-concert sila dito sa Pilipinas.. Kaya maituturing na "Phenomenal" ang pag-ere nito sa Pilipinas. At ito rin ang naging tulay sa pagsunod-sunod na pag-ere ng iba pang Asian Drama...

DID YOU KNOW?

There was one time that Birch Tree Milk was really phased out from the market, and that was during the 1980's. This was because some cows got infected after a factory blew up and contaminated the dairy farm nearby. Some time later, a radio announcer informed the bad news on air (probably on DZBB in 1988) that the sales of Birch Tree were reported to drastically plunge as consumers were panicking. The announcer on-air (I don't know what's his/her name) had to clarify the issue by reading a long list of serial or packaging numbers of the contaminated Birch Tree cans that were shipped sometime after the incident occurred.

As a result, Birch Tree's wholesome reputation was destroyed and the product faded away by the 90s. It tried to make a comeback sometime in 1996 (with strawberry and chocolate flavors this time) but it still didn't flourish. It was only sometime in 2009 or 2010 after Richard & Lucy Gomez were tagged as lead endorser's of BT that the milk brand again regained a clean and worry-free reputation. Jake Jacinto For sometime, during Birch Tree's temporary "comeback" in the 90's, Jimmy Santos(?) was its endorser. As to Jireh Jhae, there's already a TV commercial of that on YouTube, part of the commercial break of IBC's True or False. Just search on YouTube "Magsine Tayo True or False." (Magsine Tayo is the name of the YouTube user who uploaded it.)

"Songs In The Key Of Politics"

IN A country as crazy about music as the Philippines, it is not surprising that even politics has a soundtrack. Long before showbiz and media personalities dominated Philippine political life, music was already part of it, from the revolutionary songs that boosted the morale of the indios revolting against the Spaniards, to the different anthems Filipinos were made to sing before they were finally able to belt out "Lupang Hinirang" in public.

Song merged with struggle to form new musical languages during the colonial times. The late 19th-century kundiman (love song), for example, gave frame and form to subversive war songs during the revolution. Being courted was not a woman, but freedom for the Motherland, most famously embodied as "Jocelynang Baliwag." The songs of lament would continue even after the Spaniards left, and through the American and Japanese occupations. When elections finally became part of the Philippine political life, though, music remained as a constant presence, and it was only a matter of time before campaign jingles caught the politicians' — and the public's — fancy.

A jingle is basically a candidate's musical score, but its usefulness lies in its being a mnemonic device that compresses name, program, and platform into a two-minute rhyme. The best ones play endlessly in one's head. Blaring relentlessly from motorcades and speakers, a jingle enlivens the crowd before the big speech. Its mission is simple: Disarm the voter with a good harmony before drilling the message home. Speeches are all the same and easily forgotten, but a great jingle lingers.

See comment for continuation.

Jenine B. Shiongshu That is why much care is given to the selection of a candidate's theme song. From Senator Panfilo Lacson's "Si Ping ang Kinabukasan (Ping is the Future)," to former Senator Raul Roco's "Iisang Bangka (One Boat)," to President Gloria Arroyo's energetic "Go, Go, Gloria!" the campaign jingle has been an election staple for the last 50 years. Even neophytes Fernando Poe Jr. and Eddie Villanueva have their own jingles. They appeal to the Filipinos' melodic sensibilities, inventiveness, and political preoccupation. And like the government of this country, their origins can be traced to America.

Political songs emerged in the land that would be the United States of America as early as the 1700s. They were elegies lamenting the pains of a nation being born—identity, oppression, injustice, and class struggle. By the 1780s came the first known election song for America's first president: "God Save George Washington" was sung to the melody of "God Save the Queen." It also began a tradition where election jingles were sung "to the tune of" an existing popular composition.

With the advent of published sheet music in the early 20th century and the introduction of radio sets, the ground was set for an innovative medium to be exploited by the American capitalist spirit. A mix of clever lyrics and a memorable tune gave birth to the advertising jingle. Salesmen used it to ply pianos, typewriters, tobacco, and petroleum. Astute politicians later adapted this template to sell themselves to the American public. Most notable among them was the Depression-era and World War II President Franklin D. Roosevelt. His theme to lift America's morale was the optimistic "Happy Days Are Here Again."

ALL THESE developments would filter into the Philippines, but it would only be after the war that Filipino politicians would have real use for campaign jingles. The first to use one was Manila city mayor Arsenio H. Lacson.

Jenine B. Shiongshu Riding an emerging American musical trend of sensual African drumbeats and Cuban rhythms, the "Lacson Mambo" contributed to the mayor's victories in 1951, 1955, and 1959. Bloc voting had been abolished in 1951, which meant that major party affiliation was no guarantee of election success. Each candidate was left to his own campaign initiatives. This was a time when there was one radio for every 100 Filipino and television was just being introduced to a mass market. Nevertheless, Filipinos made sure they were up to date with musical trends from overseas, and the mambo had just the right mix of Latin beat and Hollywood flair to catch their attention.

At the time, the country's charismatic defense secretary, Ramon Magsaysay, was about to run for president. He was quick to take the public's musical cue. Composed by Raul S. Manglapus, the syncopated rhythms of "Mambo Magsaysay" soon had Filipinos tapping their feet and swaying their hips. But the infectious song's charm also lay in its straightforward English-Tagalog lyrics:

Everywhere that you would look/was a bandit or a crook/
Peace and order was a joke/'til Magsaysay pumasok/
That is why, that is why/ you will hear the people cry/
Our democracy will die kung wala si Magsaysay.

The jingle was crafted around Magsaysay's image as a fighter against communist guerrillas. It was one the United States adored. The words seem harmless. But in the context of America's concern with communism infiltrating Southeast Asia, a different shade surfaces. "Our democracy will die kung wala si Magsaysay" is a faint reminder that Magsaysay — and only Magsaysay — could save this nation from the communists. (Gentle persuasion or subtle mind control is the listener's prerogative.)

The song also complemented the defense secretary's American-style "Magsaysay is My Guy" slogan, which the candidate brought to life by being the first to go to the mountains and barrios to personally talk to the people and shake their hands.

Jenine B. Shiongshu Previous candidates had either refused to campaign actively or left the road trips to their party's lieutenants. The people decided it was really time to "Mambo na!" and voted the burly Magsaysay as president in 1953.

Perry Patts Actually, si Olli-Pekka Kallasvuo ang may kasalanan kung bakit bumagsak ang Nokia.

They knew the entry of the iPhone but they seem to be complacent with their position as a global handset maker. Hindi niya inanticipate na darating ang panahon na papasok ang Android at magsisilabasan yung mga small time manufacturers at white-label brands.

Microsoft Mobile is not bad though, I now use a Lumia 640XL as a replacement to my Lumia 620. Mas maganda pa nga lang nung Nokia pa sila.
